

FIFER DESIGN STUDIO

PRESS RELEASE

August 22, 2008

Fifer Design Studio is pleased to announce that another team member has passed the NCIDQ exam! After continued education, and work experience, Danielle Hoyt was approved to take the exam... and just found out that she has officially passed!

“It is so important that interior designers seek to become professional certificate holders, as it relates to life safety... so we are thrilled to have Danielle Hoyt (Project Manager) join Casey Potash (Director of Interior Design) as a certificate holder.” -Marty Fifer, AIA

“We are so proud of Danielle for her accomplishment! The NCIDQ was a big step in her career... and we know we are very lucky to have her working with us on our team.” -Casey Potash, IIDA

The National Council for Interior Design Qualifications serves to identify to the public those interior designers who have met the minimum standards for professional practice by administering a three part exam. Once the candidate has received the educational background and necessary work experience, they can apply to take the exam. The first portion of the exam focuses on programming, schematic design, and design development. The second portion of the exam focuses on codes, construction documents, construction details, construction administration, and professionalism. The final portion of the exam focuses is a practicum that focuses on all areas of documentation of a project.
